Atlanta, Georgia – 770.264.1420

Marissa "Missy" Torgerson represents businesses and management teams in complex employment and commercial disputes, bringing a thoughtful, pragmatic approach shaped by nearly seven years of employee-side advocacy. Her background provides her with a well-rounded perspective on workplace issues, enabling her to anticipate opposing arguments and counsel clients toward practical, cost-effective resolutions.

Missy's practice focuses on employment and commercial litigation, including discrimination, harassment, retaliation, wage-and-hour collective actions, restrictive covenant disputes, and construction-related conflicts. She manages litigation from start to finish, handling all phases of a case, such as pleadings, discovery, depositions, motion practice, and settlement negotiations. Clients value her ability to communicate clearly, remain transparent throughout the process, and keep their business goals at the center of every strategic decision.

A core element of Missy's professional identity is her commitment to mentorship and community involvement. Having benefited from strong mentors early in her career, she is dedicated to fostering meaningful professional relationships and supporting the development of the next generation of attorneys. She regularly takes on leadership roles in legal organizations focused on mentorship, professional development, and inclusion in the legal profession.

Missy approaches the attorney-client relationship with empathy, kindness, and honesty, believing that trust and open communication are essential to effective representation. She strives to be a steady, reliable advocate for clients navigating challenging disputes, helping them move forward with confidence.

Outside of her legal practice, Missy is a certified yoga instructor and an avid live music fan. She also enjoys thrift shopping and discovering unique finds, a hobby that reflects her creative and thoughtful approach both personally and professionally.
