In this week's episode of OK at Work, Sarah Sawyer and Russell Berger, attorneys at Offit Kurman, discuss the recruitment of new hires in light of recent changes in federal government employment under the new presidential administration. The discussion includes strategies for attracting experienced federal workers affected by job terminations, layoffs, or changes in remote work policies. Given the unique impact on the DMV area, the conversation highlights the potential for private sector employers to create stable, flexible, and appealing work environments to attract these talented individuals. They also explore the added value these seasoned professionals could bring to private organizations.
